

The Soap Box (vol.20)

March 2003

I loved Mike Tyson's post fight comments about his life: "I like to get high, play with my children and drink."

Well at least Iron Mike has his priorities straight.

Who says there isn't any role models in sports?

Underrated Movie: Rock Star.

I read the other day that Corliss Williamson donated 1 million dollars to his hometown in Arkansas to build a rec center for the kids. You know with all the lame, stupid shit that athletes do and the stuff that makes the news. This good deed by Williamson is little more than back page news.

Well not here . . . good for you Big Nasty.

Ron Artest who didn't make the Eastern Conference All-Star team, and who was already on suspension from the league during the All-Star break, still managed to get into a fight during an All-Star party.

Good for you Ron.

Is there a bigger scam than this 'Star Registry' gift idea? Who the fuck came up with that? The better question is, what genius came up with that? I mean, who owns the stars, let alone has the right to assign names to them. Yet they are advertising it like crazy during Valentine's Day.

"Yeah, um, look honey, I didn't buy you that diamond ring, but look up there, see that star, it's named Wendy." . . . yeah, that'll work.

My next business is selling names to grains of sand on Venice Beach.

I'm just so happy that Hollywood finally got Steve Martin and Queen Latifah together to do a movie.

Okay, so I watched the last episode of Joe Millionaire . . . that's what happens when I quit drinking for a few days.

I actually rented and watched Sweet Home Alabama. I have no idea why. Not that it's bad, it's just that I hate any movie that you can tell what's going to happen 5 minutes in. I thought Legally Blonde was a decent movie, but this Sweet Home Alabama gives even 'chick flicks' a bad name. They might as well have put Tom Hanks and Meg Ryan in it.

Plus, I used to think Reese Witherspoon was kinda hot, but all I can think when I watch this movie is . . . why are here teeth so fucking yellow? I thought the tint on my TV was going out. Don't believe me . . . check it out. (well wait for it to be on HBO)

Until Next Time ...

- SEM

